Jason Fink, President/CEO

As we move into August, I was happy to see that one of the items that I was looking towards this month is going to be occurring. The new service from Williamsport to Charlotte begins on Tuesday, August 18. This will provide our community with much better options for connections than through Philadelphia.

American Airlines flies roughly 400 daily flights out of Philadelphia in comparison to the 700 flights daily out of Charlotte. For the vast majority of domestic travel, Charlotte will meet or exceed the needs of the business and leisure traveler here in our market.

The other key aspect of Charlotte is that come this winter, we should be able to avoid the weather delays and cancellations that regularly hit Philadelphia. Being further south and inland, it won't be as susceptible to weather delays we have experienced out of Philadelphia.

Unfortunately, not all is good here in the area. Some of it is nature related and others are driven by elected leaders. Almost all of it though is affecting area small business.

While I definitely have enjoyed the dry summer that we're getting, it's another tough year for area farmers. The other night I had a chance to talk with a friend who's in the farming industry. While he's feeling blessed right now because of where his fields are in relationship to any rain our area has seen, many of his colleagues aren't so lucky. This is the third year in a row for many farmers being impacted by weather. The prior two years we had wet springs and summers and now we're looking at drought conditions for much of our area. Hopefully you're taking a chance to buy your local summer produce from area sources. Having worked on a farm for a couple of summers while I was a kid, I know how hard working farmers are and the sacrifices they make to keep their farming operations running.

The other challenge I mentioned is the one that restaurants and bars are facing because of the actions of our Governor. We're approaching 3 weeks from the time that these businesses were forced to reduce their operations. The reason for this was that there has been a spike in the number of people being diagnosed with COVID-19. Through contact tracing that was done in Allegheny County, they found that some of the increase was due to what were deemed by the Governor as "dive bars". In their announcement, the Governor and Secretary of Health said they were surgically addressing this spike by taking this measure; a measure done on a Wednesday allowing for less than 8 hours for compliance.

The amount of time allowed shows no consideration for the small business owner who is trying to adhere to these directives. For those of you that have no understanding of the restaurant industry, one of the key points is that food orders for the week and weekend are usually placed by Monday/Tuesday. When this directive came out, the vast majority of food orders were already placed, allowing no time for these restaurants to make any changes.

Let's not also forget those in the catering or event planning industry that had events planned for that weekend. Those people were left scrambling around because of how swift this latest directive was implemented.

Now, we've also seen an increase of numbers here in our area. However, the contact tracing doesn't support the measures that were implemented by the Governor on restaurants. Unlike those cases in the Pittsburgh and Philadelphia areas, none of it has involved local restaurants and bars. Our cases are from those traveling out of state and having spread through family contact.

One other component to these numbers that gets lost in the reporting, is that the age of those being diagnosed are younger. It also is important to note that the number of people requiring hospitalization remains low with only 3 people (as of August 3) being reported in the UPMC network for the north central system of hospitals they operate in the region.

The surgical approach by the Governor should have been to focus on the Philadelphia and Pittsburgh areas for addressing the issues for restaurants and bars. It should also have been a clearer directive on out of state travel. We have received a number of calls from businesses trying to get clarification for employees that have vacationed in a state on the recommended quarantine list.

Instead, the Governor took an ax and chopped an entire industry to a level where many are struggling to remain viable. In the past week, I had two restaurant owners reach out to me and share their challenges. One is shutting down for an extended period in hopes of being able to reopen in September under different operational requirements. The other is at a point where one of the spouses is looking for a job to supplement the revenue loss.

Restaurants are struggling to keep their doors open. The vast majority of them are working to keep within the guidelines set forth in the reopening procedures set out previously. While there may be a few that aren't adhering to them, the bulk are doing what is required such as having staff wear masks, using paper menus, and having hand sanitizer readily available. The Governor needs to revisit the manner in which he conducts his directives in moving through the three phases. It was not across the state but more surgical in its approach. Our restaurants desperately need this assistance now here in Lycoming County.

At the federal level, we also need to see legislation that is focused on liability protection for businesses like restaurants, schools and other institutions that are following the recommended COVID-19 safety guidelines. The Senate's version of the next recovery bill includes this protection. However, it wasn't in the House's version and the preliminary word from the White House is that the President is willing to let it out if he's able to get everything else he wants. If I'm a business or school and I'm following all safe protocols and someone gets COVID-19 and sues me for it, I deserve protection because I followed what I was told to do. The President should get behind this and so too should the House.

It's Time to Be Counted!

April 1st was Census Day – but the Census is still ongoing. People who have not responded can still respond by Internet, phone and mail. The 2020 Census is taking place and it is important for Rural America to be counted!

Over the last few months, like the rest of the nation, the Census Bureau has had to change, adapt, and pivot how we engage with people living in the United States and its territories. Although we have had to make changes, our mission remains the same: Count EVERYONE once, only once, and in the right place.

Everyone counts, and we are asking you to help us share this message within in your community.

It is important to count EVERYONE in our rural communities! For example, you can share the message to local radio, newsletters, bulletin boards, local newspapers, marquees, PSAs, YouTube, flyers, and/or email, and social media – anywhere you deem fit! Please be sure to include the #ShapeYourFuture and the hashtag in your social media messaging!

We want everyone to respond to the Census and to challenge their friends to do the same. During the week of August 2-8, we want Rural America to say it with one voice: It is Time to Be Counted! The more people are encouraged, the more people respond to the 2020 Census!

Thank you for representing your community as a "trusted voice", and for taking time from your day to read this message. Feel free to reach out to the U.S. Census Bureau if you have questions, need sample content to share or other creative ideas on how to share about the Census.

Let's get EVERYONE counted in the 2020 Census! Please use the following social media post to connect with your friends everywhere:

"#ShapeYourFuture. Rural America Respond Now to the #2020Census!" Ways to respond include online, by phone or if applicable, via the paper questionnaire with unique ID that was mailed or sent to your home."

Stallion diversifies to help local economy, public

ddanneker@sungazette.com

A company that originally came to the area to support the oil and gas industry has continued to diversify its product range to aid the area during the COVID-19 pandemic and beyond.

Stallion, at 297 Beautys Run Road, has taken the lessons of the fast-paced and flexible technologies of the gas and oil industry and implemented them into different businesses, said Brian Brockman, operations manager in the Williamsport area.

“The oil and gas industry as a whole has become very diverse and had to adapt with the downturn in the oil and gas market as a whole,” said Brockman. “Natural gas is still going fairly well, and in our opinion is the future of clean energy.”

The company has divided itself into four distinct brands to provide services in various sectors: SIMTERY, StallionRents, StallionHauls and StaRComm.

Of those, the rental and communication branches have helped significantly through the pandemic.

StaRComm, which was started with the inception of Stallion, offers satellite and cellular communications, as well as closed circuit TV, intercom and security camera systems.

Many schools have been contacting Stallion to get quotes on providing internet sources to their students during the pandemic.

With the protection of citizens in mind, Lycoming County government has also been in contact with the service company.

“We’ve had some very interesting technology that we’ve adapted for COVID-19,” said Brockman, including a touchless kiosk, which measures people’s temperature and determines if they’re wearing a mask before they are permitted to enter.

StallionRents, which has recently undergone rebranding to focus on renting equipment to local businesses and the community, will offer an alternative to purchasing new products.

“StallionRents is going to be a segment of our business that we would like local business to potentially utilize, and residents doing DIY home improvement if they need a piece of equipment,” said Brockman.

Additionally, the mobile offices that have been used for years on the oilfields have again found use in expanding the square-footage for companies seeking

Stallion is one of the top customers of data to Verizon and AT&T through its work in the gas and oil sector

“That has allowed us to leverage that buying power to the general consumer for less,” said Brockman. “We’re gonna see a lot of groups in that space. Everything’s connected these days, any device that’s connected via cellular, we can help save companies money.”

With all the ways Stallion is working to diversify, they will still be working in the gas and oil sector.

“We don’t think, by any way shape or form, that gas is going away,” said Brockman. “There’s a very strong presence here, especially in Williamsport, Lycoming County and in Tioga, Bradford and Susquehanna counties.”

“All these counties are going to have a lot of activity for the foreseeable future,” he added.

Jersey Shore State Bank gives to first responders

By DEREK DANNEKER
ddanneker@sungazette.com

In donating to local first responders, one local bank said its giving patterns are a mirror of a community who cares.

"We're a giving bank, not because of what we say, but because of what we do," said Richard A. Grafmyre, CEO of Penns Woods Bancorp Inc.

Across all branches the bank holding company donated more than $25,000 to first responders in six counties, with the Jersey Shore State Bank branches giving more than $19,000 of that sum.

"We have a tremendous amount of respect for first responders and quite frankly, we believe that a lot of volunteers don't get recognized," he said.

The money was donated without any "strings attached" and those volunteer companies who received money were allowed to spend it however they see fit, said Grafmyre.

Although the companies, themselves, help with fundraisers for other benefits, some struggle with getting everything they need to do their jobs.

"Especially on the fire company side, many of them struggle to get the general and safety equipment they need," said Grafmyre.

From September 2019 to the end of November 2019, The bank holding company donated $25 for every home equity loan to a first responding company of the customers' choice

Grafmyre said the bank also supported other fundraising drives during that time, to include boot drives, where people put their donations into a fire boot and touch a truck drives.

"We made it very interactive with our branch system and I think the touch a truck event was really cool, people could bring their kids in to touch a fire truck or ambulance or whatever it might be," he said.

It was by speaking with employees and customers that banking administrators decided to give money to first responders.

"We have a number of folks in our company that were first responders and family members who still are," said Grafmyre. "I think it was a community need we saw and decided that we could support them."

The community that surrounds the Jersey Shore State Bank and works within its halls define how the bank gives, he said.

"We are a community bank and the fabric of our community is the same as our fabric culturally, these kinds of things are easy for us to do," he said.

Although the COVID-19 pandemic stopped immediate plans for more donations, there are more plans for charity work, said Grafmyre.

"It's not the last time we run a program similar to that and we hope that the next program we can find a way to stimulate even more customer interaction from it," he said. "The more our customer base understands the support we have, the more they'll support them too."

Adelphoi Village helps children, teens find forever homes

By MALLORIE McILWAIN
mmcilwain@sungazette.com

Adelphoi Foster Care and Adoption Services, located at 1965 Lycoming Creek Road, has helped children find their forever home after Father Paschal Morlino started the organization in 1971.

In the Williamsport and surrounding communities including Bradford, Tioga, Sullivan and Montour counties, Adelphoi prides itself on providing a stable of services ranging from charter schools, gender specific living arrangements, maximum security centers, sex offender treatment as well as its fostering and adoption services.

Dave Hall, program director, and Sue Kaczynski, recruiter, have combined experience of over 80 years helping children find permanent placement, independent living spaces, foster parents, all alongside their superior support from staff members.

“We have a full array of services for kids and families,” Hall said. “We want to get them to their forever family.”

Adelphoi also does “extensive” training and certifications of foster parents before children and teens are placed in homes.

According to Hall, the certification includes health care and financial checks, home safety inspections, and much more.

The entire process can take up to four months, he said.

“The kids we have may have a higher level of need,” he added.

The company also added two new foster parent trainings including trauma informed care and “coreteen” specifically for helping teenagers get out of residential or group home living services.

“Twenty-three percent of kids in care in Pennsylvania are between the ages of 16 and 20,” Kaczynski said. “A lot of them have been searching for permanency.”

She added that one in four teenagers will “age out” of foster care at the age of 18 before even getting permanency.

Adelphoi also works concurrently with the kids biological family to either prepare for permanency or finding another permanent placement through an established relationship or a foster parent.

Other programs that are utilized include independent living for teens and young adults of the ages 14 to 21 years. They will have the same concurrent care with their biological family, their case worker and other services that are provided specifically from Adelphoi including access to dental and other health care, rides to and from school, work or college as well as help with budgeting, driving lessons and room and board.

In addition to their case workers, Adelphoi created a 24-hour on-call line for any foster parents, kids, or biological family members that need their help.

“We have very high standards and very high standards of safety for children,” Hall added. “We don’t compromise those standards. We want to give them the best chance for success.”

“The culture of this office is that we are very supportive of our families,” Kaczynski said. “They have a family-like relationship with us.”

For more information or if you or someone you know is interested in becoming a foster parent, please contact Adelphoi at www.adelphoi.org.

Business works with public and private school libraries

By MIKE REUTHER
mreuther@sungazette.com

Opening the Book is a unique local business creating furniture and design work for libraries.

In Williamsport can be found the company's North American headquarters at Water Tower Square, 1000 Commerce Park Drive.

"We service accounts all across the U.S. and Canada," Jolie Conahan, director of sales and marketing, said.

Conahan said the company operates a manufacturing facility in Muskegon, Michigan, while all design work is done in Williamsport.

The company works with both public and school libraries.

"We probably do more schools than anything," Conahan said.

The design work and furniture for elementary age children is often done in a way that integrates play with reading. It's the needs of that age group, she said, that make up much of the company's work.

Among its projects was the design work for the Milton School District Library.

"We would like to do more local jobs," Conahan said.

Trained dealer representatives work with the company to find jobs.

In addition to Conahan, the small Williamsport staff is comprised of Megan Fink, lead library designer; Janell Cipriani, marketing specialist; and Miranda Leathers, customer support specialist.

Conahan said there exist many education supply companies.

"The difference with us is our creative outlet," she said. "We aren't a mass supplier. Every job is custom-designed to space and needs."

Cipriani said she gets a joy out of knowing people are happy with the way they help transform library spaces.

"That's why I like the interaction," she said.

Leathers said, "The most exciting thing so far for me is when a customer gets her dream library."

Conahan said she likes that their designs for elementary school libraries help children more easily find books.

"It's that joy in entering a new space and seeing new things," she added.

Fink said there is always a new set of challenges in coming up with plans for a library.

To get the word out about its services, the company does a lot of digital marketing.

"At some point we will probably turn this into a showroom," Conahan said, while standing in the Williamsport offices.

At the outset of the coronavirus pandemic, the staff worked remotely from their homes.

"It was challenging," Conahan said. "But we were probably more equipped to deal with it than other companies. With headquarters in the United Kingdom it wasn't a big hurdle for us."
